Where You are Never a "Stranger"

THE grandfathers and fathers of many of the readers of this newspaper have been our honored guests at the old St. Denis hotel in New York. Perhaps you know us too, for there is hardly a city of the South but boasts of some prominent minister, editor, professional or business man whom we have at one time or another entertained. It was through years of association with our Southern guests that we learned the charm of the delightful hospitality of the South which we shall never forget.

On your visit North this Summer, you will be delighted with our new house—The Martinique. Even in a city noted for its beautiful hotels, this modern hostelry is distinctive as the latest work of one of the most distinguished hotel architects in the world. Many of its features are new even to New York.

The location of the Martinique meets your requirements exactly. You will never be rushed for time. It is only a few minutes from your train to your room. The new Pennsylvania Station is only one short block from our main entrance. The Hudson Tubes which operate quick trains from the important steamship and railway terminals is directly opposite. All principal car lines pass the doors.

You will enjoy the cool roomy apartments, the modern appointments and the cheerful home atmosphere of this ideal hotel. The building is very high, faces South and West on Greeley Square, so that you enjoy an abundance of cool refreshing air. You will especially appreciate the care and attention we give your wife or daughter when traveling alone. A corps of experienced maids attends the comfort of ladies, instead of the ordinary way of leaving such work to bell boys.

Ladies who come to New York to shop will find clustered around the Martinique the large department stores and fashionable shops of Fifth Avenue as though placed there for their special convenience. You need never be out of sight of the hotel when shopping. If fatigued, in a few minutes you are back in your room for a refreshing nap or luncheon to resume again at your will. This enables you to shop leisurely and satisfactorily.

All the best theatres are centered in the vicinity of the Martinique, within easy walking distance. This proximity permits you to take plenty of time in preparation which always enhances an evening's pleasure.

We have been told that the Martinique is the most homelike hotel in New York. We believe this to be true because we planned to have it so.

The knowledge gained through years of experience, the determination to provide only the best, the same personal care and attention to details that built up an international reputation for our restaurant and hotel over fifty years ago is concentrated in the management of the Martinique. Our location is new. Our methods are new. But our principles are as old as our beginning.

If you want to know how it feels to get a warm hearty welcome from a New York hotel, come to the Martinique. Every employe from the clerk at the desk who will greet you to the porter who will bid you good bye will individually take a personal interest in your comfort and will be anxious to contribute to the pleasure of your stay.
